World Refugee Day rally & march

We gather to depict the difficult refugee journey, from violence in their native lands to crossing the desert or over the ocean—only to end up in a jail cell in the U.S.

Refugees are specifically defined and protected in international law. Refugees have fled their country of origin because of feared persecution, conflict, violence, or other circumstances that have seriously disturbed public order, and who, as a result, require international protection. Their situation is often so perilous and intolerable that they cross national borders to seek safety in nearby countries, and thus become internationally recognized as refugees with access to assistance from other nations, UNHCR (United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees), and other organizations. They are so recognized precisely because it is too dangerous for them to return home, and they therefore need sanctuary elsewhere. Forcibly returning them to their country of origin can potentially have deadly consequences.
